

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910794756703321
Titolo	The power of resistance : culture, ideology and social reproduction in global contexts // edited by Rowhea M. Elmesky, Carol Camp Yeakey, Olivia Marcucci
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Bingley, [England] : , : Emerald Publishing, , 2017 ©2017
ISBN	1-78714-887-4 1-78350-462-5
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (508 pages) : illustrations
Collana	Advances in education in diverse communities: research, policy and praxis, , 1479-358X ; ; v. 12
Disciplina	370.9
Soggetti	Education - History History of education Protest movements
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references.
Nota di contenuto	Prelims -- Institutional and historical factors in inequality -- Students, youth, and families as agents of resistance -- Epilogue: the call for freedom -- Index.
Sommario/riassunto	Recent history has documented a phenomenal surge in global unrest. From Missouri to the Middle East, the world has watched waves of momentum build, peak, and dip around events such as the shooting of Michael Brown and the acquittal of Hosni Mubarak. There have been waves of mass protests of resistance, vivid expressions of human agency through the use of technology and social media, and the clear search for finding voice in spaces where the culture of silence has been the norm for decades. This quest for humanization has led, in some cases, to macro-level changes such as the fall of governments, the collapse of economic stability, and the production of immense refugee populations. It has also led to micro-level changes within individuals' decisions to no longer be silenced or accept the status quo. Although separated by vast geographic space, this book serves to link these struggles through developing understandings of common patterns within and interconnections across oppressive societal structures. While these dynamic forms of human agency can be studied from multiple perspectives, this book is guided through the powerful ideological frameworks of culture and social reproduction and looks specifically to the role of schooling as a vehicle for catalysing change.

---