

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910797969603321
Autore	Usner Daniel H.
Titolo	Weaving alliances with other women : Chitimacha Indian work in the New South // Daniel H. Usner
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Athens, Ohio ; ; London, England : , : The University of Georgia Press, , 2015 ©2015
ISBN	0-8203-4847-3
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (136 p.)
Collana	Mercer University Lamar Memorial Lectures ; ; Number 56
Disciplina	305.897/90763
Soggetti	Chitimacha Indians Indian women basket makers - Louisiana Chitimacha Indians - Social conditions - 20th century Female friendship - Social aspects - Louisiana - History - 20th century White people - Louisiana - Relations with Indians - History - 20th century Louisiana Race relations History 20th century
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	"Entirely a philanthropic work" : Mary McIlhenny Bradford, benevolent merchant -- "We have no justice here" : Christine Navarro Paul, Chitimacha basketmaker -- "Language of the wild things" : Caroline Coroneos Dormon, New Deal naturalist -- Appendix: "What a Chitimacha Indian woman did for her people," by Mary McIlhenny Bradford.
Sommario/riassunto	"Friendships that Christine Paul (1874-1946) sustained with Mary Bradford (1869-1954) and Caroline Dormon (1888-1971) at different times in her life offer an all too scarce vantage point from which Daniel Usner explores the condition of American Indians in the Jim Crow South. 'Aspects that, for the most part, have not been addressed in historical works' according to Devon Mihesuah, 'are the feelings and emotions of Native women, the relationships among them, and their observations of non-Natives.' In Weaving Alliances with Other Women, Usner hopes to overcome this neglect for one Indigenous community in the southern United States. In Christine Paul's respective exchanges of information and insight with two non-Indian women, thanks to the survival of her invaluable correspondence with Bradford and Dormon, Usner attempts to ascertain what Rebecca Sharpless called a 'bivocal representation' of relationships fraught with important social, economic, and cultural tensions. Interacting closely within a social web largely woven with woven objects, the identities of these three women nonetheless developed along very separate paths--paths mapped-out by their unequal positions in the New South"--Provided by publisher.
