

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910808168403321
Autore	Jenkins Thomas E. <1962->
Titolo	The character of God : recovering the lost literary power of American Protestantism // Thomas E. Jenkins
Pubbl/distr/stampa	New York, : Oxford University Press, 1997
ISBN	0-19-773852-4 1-280-45360-5 0-19-535469-9 0-585-25410-9
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (283 pages)
Collana	Religion in America series
Disciplina	230.0440973 230/.044/09034
Soggetti	Christianity and literature - United States - History - 19th century Christianity and literature - United States - History - 20th century God (Christianity) - Attributes - History of doctrines - 19th century God (Christianity) - Attributes - History of doctrines - 20th century Protestant churches - United States - Doctrines - History - 19th century Protestant churches - United States - Doctrines - History - 20th century
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index. Previously issued in print: 1997.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. 205-261) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents; 1 Introduction: Character Styles; 2 The Problem of God's Anger; 3 Serenity and Torment; 4 Sympathy and Alienation; 5 Vitality and Anger; 6 Love in the Trinity; 7 Desire and Disgust; 8 Modernism and Literature; 9 The Social Gospel and Its Critics; 10 The Limitations of Political Theology; 11 Prospects; Notes; Index
Sommario/riassunto	Jenkins maintains that theology became boring because the depiction of God as a character became boring, fashioned according to theologians' notions of character, derived from contemporary literature. He considers why this was problematic.