Sommario/riassunto	This edition of Quality Assurance in Education takes as its theme "Standards and the doctoral award" - a theme which has been of increasing importance to students, universities and employers over the last five years or so. The Harris Report (1996) was landmark document in the debates about quality issues in research awards recommending, in the now famous box 3, the conditions in which quality could be delivered at PhD level (Harris, 1996).
