

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910811087903321
Autore	Christophers Brett <1971->
Titolo	Positioning the missionary : John Booth Good and the confluence of cultures in nineteenth-century British Columbia / / Brett Christophers
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Vancouver, : UBC Press, c1998
ISBN	1-283-13164-1 9786613131645 0-7748-5367-0
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (xxi, 200 pages) : illustrations, maps, portraits
Disciplina	266/.3711
Soggetti	Ntlakyapamuk Indians - Missions Colonies
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Bibliographic Level Mode of Issuance: Monograph
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. [182]-192) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Front Matter -- Contents -- Figures -- Acknowledgments -- Introduction -- Abbreviations -- Beginnings -- Redemption -- Reproduction -- Space -- Conversion -- Morals -- Dissolution -- Notes -- Bibliography -- Index
Sommario/riassunto	"In Positioning the Missionary, Brett Christophers explores the place of missionaries in histories of colonialism, focusing on John Booth Good, Anglican missionary to the Nlha7kapmx from 1867 to 1883. Christophers examines the genesis of Good's mission and the question of why the Nlha7kapmx were interested in Christianity. He goes on to discuss Good's methods and impact on the Nlha7kapmx as well their influence on his own beliefs and prejudices, and to position missionaries in terms of representations of Natives, views on Native-European contact, and the politics of the Native land question." "The concluding chapter examines Good's role in Nlha7kapmx dealings, first with the colonial authorities and later with provincial and federal governments." "Positioning the Missionary is an important contribution to the scholarly reassessment of colonialism, valuable not only to historians and students of British Columbia but also to anyone interested in the dispossession and marginalization of Native societies." --Jacket

