Sommario/riassunto	The final monograph of a research project on "Return of Religion in the Public Space" is the first and only analysis of the divergent post-secularisation development of religion in the Czech Republic and Slovakia since the dissolution of Czechoslovakia. In addition to the analysis of the development of church-state relations in the two countries, organizational issues facing the established churches and the various ways in which these churches are active in the public space and the public response thereto, the book also addresses issues surrounding church financing and other aspects of the (renewed) public presence of churches and religion. The author concluded that the established churches in particular have failed to adequately cope with the challenges of modern secularization and are even less capable of managing the impacts of the various post-secular tendencies
