

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910814165503321
Autore	Caspi David J. <1968->
Titolo	Ideologically motivated murder [[electronic resource] ] : the threat posed by white supremacist groups // David J. Caspi
Pubbl/distr/stampa	El Paso, : LFB Scholarly Pub. LLC, 2013
ISBN	1-59332-706-4
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (207 p.)
Collana	Criminal justice recent scholarship
Disciplina	363.3250973
Soggetti	Domestic terrorism - United States Terrorists - Social networks White supremacy movements - United States Hate groups - United States Right-wing extremists - United States
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Domestic terrorist threat and research limitations -- Approaches to the study of terrorism -- Social network analysis and the study of terrorism -- The study : white supremacist group networks and lethality -- The players : biographies of core groups of the study -- Findings: social network analysis -- Findings : regression analysis of network characteristics -- Findings : regression analysis of group attributes -- Discussion and conclusion.
Sommario/riassunto	Acts of terrorism committed by domestic extremists outnumber those committed by international actors. White supremacist groups are linked to a considerable number of these terrorist acts. Although part of the same movement, certain groups appear to pose a greater threat than others in that they are linked to a greater number of ideologically motivated homicides. Caspi investigated whether a group's location within its network accounted for this phenomenon. Interestingly, this preliminary study suggests that an association between network location and threat of extreme violence does exist. This