

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910816427903321
Autore	Ray Ayesha
Titolo	The soldier and the state in India : nuclear weapons, counterinsurgency, and the transformation of Indian civil-military relations // Ayesha Ray
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Los Angeles, [California] : , : Sage, , 2013 ©2013
ISBN	81-321-1154-0
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (186 p.)
Disciplina	322/.50954
Soggetti	Civil-military relations - India - History National security - India - Decision making Nuclear weapons - Government policy - United States - History Nuclear weapons - Government policy - India - History Civil-military relations - United States - History India Military policy
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Cover ; Contents; List of Abbreviations ; Preface ; Acknowledgments ; 1 - Introduction ; 2 - The Evolution of India's Higher Defense Organization ; 3 - Nuclear Weapons Development in a Strategic Vacuum ; 4 - The Effects of Pakistan's Nuclear Weapons on Civil-Military Relations in India ; 5 - The Indian Military's Role in Unconventional Operations ; 6 - Conclusion ; Bibliography ; Index ; About the Author
Sommario/riassunto	The Soldier and the State in India is one of the first attempts at offering a theoretical perspective for examining some of the most critical issues that have emerged in Indian civil-military relations. It specifically examines issues pertaining to military expertise and military professionalism that emerged whenever there was a contestation in civil-military functions, thereby allowing the military greater influence in policy-making. The book uses Samuel Huntington's ideas on military professionalism and Peter Feaver's discussion of military expertise in the American context as the