

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910819922603321
Autore	Seligmann Matthew S. <1967->
Titolo	Spies in uniform : British military and naval intelligence on the eve of the first World War // Matthew S. Seligmann
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Oxford ; ; New York, : Oxford University Press, 2006
ISBN	1-280-90529-8 0-19-151463-2
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (287 p.)
Disciplina	355.3/432/094109041
Soggetti	Military intelligence - Great Britain - History - 20th century World War, 1914-1918 - Military intelligence - Great Britain
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. [264]-268) and index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents; Abbreviations; Map; Introduction; 1. Court and Social: The Role of the Service Attache; 2. Spies in Uniform: British Service Attaches as Intelligence-Gatherers; 3. Men and Machines: Service Attaches as Procurers of Information on Personnel and Materiel; 4. Harbingers of the German Menace: The Service Attaches' Perspective on Germany; 5. Taking Centre Stage: The Influence of the Service Attaches on the British Government; Conclusion; Bibliography; Index; A; B; C; D; E; F; G; H; I; J; K; L; M; N; O; P; R; S; T; V; W; Y; Z
Sommario/riassunto	Did the British Government go to war in 1914 because of a well-founded fear of a German threat or did it, as some would now argue, send thousands to their deaths to fight against a danger, the existence of which was not even backed by any hard intelligence? To address this question, Spies in Uniform examines the information sent back from Germany by the Government's principal intelligence source, its 'men on the spot', the service attach--eacute--s in Berlin. Using their reports, previously thought to have been lost, the book demonstrates that the intelligence picture of Germany available to