

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910821298103321
Titolo	A voluntary exile : Chinese Christianity and cultural confluence since 1552 // edited by Anthony E. Clark
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Lanham, Maryland : , : Lehigh University Press, , 2014 ©2014
ISBN	1-61146-149-9
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (238 p.)
Collana	Studies in missionaries and Christianity in China
Altri autori (Persone)	ClarkAnthony E
Disciplina	266.00951
Soggetti	Missions - China - History Christianity and culture - China China Church history
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Includes index.
Nota di contenuto	Contents; Illustrations; Abbreviations; Acknowledgments; Introduction; Chapter One: A Glorious Failure; Chapter Two: Jesuit Formation and Its Influence on the Methods of Matteo Ricci; Chapter Three: The Lefebvre Incident of 1754; Chapter Four: Restoring the Ancient Faith; Chapter Five: Mandarins and Martyrs of Taiyuan, Shanxi, in Late-Imperial China; Chapter Six: Christianity for a Confucian Youth; Chapter Seven: Catholic and Chinese Folk Religion during the Republican Era in the Region of Taiyuan, Shanxi; Chapter Eight: Church-State Accommodation in China's "Harmonious Society"; Works Cited IndexAbout the Contributors
Sommario/riassunto	Western missionaries in China often considered themselves "voluntary exiles" in a distant land, while Chinese considered Christians either the demons of imperialism or the angels of modernization. This collection of new research provides insights into attempts to bridge the social and religious divide that separated China and the West, and serves as an artful and captivating history of how missionaries and native Christians confronted the sometimes violent antagonisms caused by cultural and linguistic difference.