| Sommario/riassunto      | Reparation, or making amends, is an ancient theme in criminal justice. It was revived in both Europe and North America in the 1980's as a practical alternative both to retributivism, and to the various utilitarian   | projects traditionally associated with retributive justice. Making Amends examines the practice of these schemes in the UK, USA, and Germany, and shows how criminal justice institutions were unresponsive to these attempts to cast justice in a new form. Yet the experiments reflected an abiding dissatisfaction with criminal courts and with the manner in which justice is conceived and...
