| Sommario/riassunto      | As seventeenth-century England wrestled with the aftereffects of theReformation, the personal frequently conflicted with the political. Inspeeches, political pamphlets, and other works of religious controversy,writers from the reign of James I to that of James II unexpectedly eruptinto autobiography. John Milton famously interrupts his argumentsagainst episcopacy with autobiographical accounts of his poetic hopesand dreams, while John Donne's attempts to describe his conversionfrom Catholicism wind up obscuring rather than explaining. Similarmoments appear in the works of Thomas Browne, John Bunyan, and thetwo King Jameses themselves. These autobiographies are familiarenough that their peculiarities have frequently been overlooked inscholarship, but as Brooke Conti notes, they sit uneasily within their | surrounding material as well as within the conventions of confessional literature that preceded them. Confessions of Faith in Early Modern England positions works such as Milton's political tracts, Donne's polemical and devotional prose, Browne's Religio Medici, and Bunyan's Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners as products of the era's tense political climate, illuminating how the pressures of public self-declaration and allegiance led to autobiographical writings that often concealed more than they revealed. For these authors, autobiography was less a genre than a device to negotiate competing political, personal, and psychological demands. The complex works Conti explores provide a privileged window into the pressures placed on early modern religious identity, underscoring that it was no simple matter for these authors to tell the truth of their interior life—even to themselves.
