

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910823082103321
Autore	Thiel Darren
Titolo	Builders : class, gender and ethnicity in the construction industry // Darren Thiel
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Abingdon, Oxon : , : Routledge, , 2012
ISBN	1-136-31322-2 0-203-11908-8 1-136-31323-0
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (209 p.)
Collana	Routledge Advances in Ethnography ; ; 8
Classificazione	SOC026000
Disciplina	331.7/69009421
Soggetti	Construction workers - England - London Construction industry - England - London England London Storbritannien London
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Cover; Title; Copyright; Dedication; Contents; Figures; Preface; Acknowledgements; Introduction; 1 Contracting and subcontracting: the build, its builders and their ethnic communities; 2 Managing 'in the office'; 3 Working 'on the tools'; 4 Time, recreation and workplace culture; 5 Becoming a builder and being working class; 6 Building masculinity: bodies, law and violence; 7 Economy, informality and social stratification; 8 Conclusion: cultures, capitalisms and class reproduction; Appendix A Specifications and costs of the building project; Notes; References; Index
Sommario/riassunto	"Building workers constitute between five and ten per cent of the total labour market in almost every country of the world. They construct, repair and maintain the vital physical infrastructure of our societies, and we rely upon and trust their achievements every day. Yet we know surprisingly little about builders, the organisation of their work, or the business relations that constitute their industry. This book redresses this lacuna by taking an in depth and close-up look at a section of London building workers and businessmen, highlighting a largely hidden social world. Based on seven years of fieldwork where the author worked as a builder in London, this book describes the informal and practical cultural activities that underpin the construction economy, analysing how gifts, kick-backs, favours and loyalties served as the glue of this economy and also the fundamental frameworks for comprehending the mores and cultures of the building workers and businessmen. Thiel also explores the ethnic diversity and divisions within the trade, considering the centrality of the interrelationships of class, ethnicity and gender in the builders cultural and practical lives and showing how these factors interrelated with economy and polity to produce the building industry and its buildings. Based predominately in cultural and economic sociology, the book will also be of interest to those working in the fields of gender studies; social class and inequality; migration and ethnicity; urban studies; and social identity"--

---