

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910828606503321
Autore	Fogel Joshua A. <1950->
Titolo	Maiden voyage : the Senzaimaru and the creation of modern Sino-Japanese relations // Joshua A. Fogel
Pubbl/distr/stampa	Oakland, California : , : University of California Press, , 2014 ©2014
ISBN	0-520-95917-5
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (316 p.)
Collana	Philip E. Lilienthal Asian studies imprint
Classificazione	HIS021000HIS008000HIS003000
Disciplina	382/.95105209034
Soggetti	HISTORY / Asia / Japan Japan Foreign economic relations China China Foreign economic relations Japan Japan Foreign relations 1600-1868 China Foreign relations 1644-1912
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references and index.
Nota di contenuto	Front matter -- Contents -- List of Illustrations -- Introduction: Situating 1862 in History and Shanghai in 1862 -- 1. The Armistice, Shanghai, and the Facilitator -- 2. Japanese Plans and the Scene in Nagasaki -- 3. Getting to Nagasaki, Loading Cargo, and the Voyage to Shanghai -- 4. Coming to Terms with the City of Shanghai and Its Inhabitants -- 5. Westerners in Shanghai: The Chinese Malaise -- 6. Opium, Christianity, and the Taipings -- 7. Dealings with the Chinese Authorities -- 8. Preparing for the Trip Home -- 9. Subsequent Missions to China in the Late Edo Period -- 10. The Senzaimaru in Fiction and Film -- Conclusion: The Senzaimaru in History -- Appendix: Japanese and Chinese Texts -- Notes -- Glossary -- Bibliography -- Index
Sommario/riassunto	After centuries of virtual isolation, during which time international sea travel was forbidden outside of Japan's immediate fishing shores, Japanese shogunal authorities in 1862 made the unprecedented decision to launch an official delegation to China by sea. Concerned by the fast-changing global environment, they had witnessed the ever-increasing number of incursions into Asia by European powers-not the least of which was Commodore Perry's arrival in Japan in 1853-54 and the forced opening of a handful of Japanese ports at the end of the decade. The Japanese reasoned that it was only a matter of time before they too encountered the same unfortunate fate as China; their hope was to learn from the Chinese experience and to keep foreign powers at bay. They dispatched the Senzaimaru to Shanghai with the purpose of investigating contemporary conditions of trade and diplomacy in the international city. Japanese from varied domains, as well as shogunal officials, Nagasaki merchants, and an assortment of deck hands, made the voyage along with a British crew, spending a total of ten weeks observing and interacting with the Chinese and with a handful of Westerners. Roughly a dozen Japanese narratives of the voyage were produced at the time, recounting personal impressions and experiences in Shanghai. The Japanese emissaries had the distinct advantage of being able to communicate with their Chinese hosts by means of the "brush conversation" (written exchanges in literary Chinese). For their part, the Chinese authorities also created a paper trail of reports and memorials concerning the Japanese visitors, which worked its way up and down the bureaucratic chain of command. This was the first official meeting of Chinese and Japanese in several centuries. Although the Chinese authorities agreed to few of the Japanese requests for trade relations and a consulate, nine years later China and Japan would sign the first bilateral treaty of amity in their history, a completely equal treaty. East Asia-and the diplomatic and trade relations between the region's two major players in the modern era-would never be the same.
