

1. Record Nr.	UNINA9910835639003321
Autore	Cooper Frederick
Titolo	Out of Empire : : Redefining Africa's Place in the World // Frederick Cooper, Franz Romer, Susanne Weigelin-Schwiedrzik . Volume 8
Pubbl/distr/stampa	[s.l.] : , : V&R unipress, , 2013
ISBN	3-7370-0097-2
Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (30 p.)
Collana	Fakultatsvortrage der Philologisch-Kulturwissenschaftlichen Fakultat der Universitat Wien
Soggetti	Political Science / Colonialism & Post-colonialism Political science
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Sommario/riassunto	The history of decolonization is usually written backward, as if the end-point (a world of juridically equivalent nation-states) was known from the start. But the routes out of colonial empire appear more varied. Some Africans sought equal rights within empire, others to federate among themselves; some sought independence. In London or Paris, officials realized they had to reform colonial empires, but not necessarily give them up. The idea of "development" became a way to assert that empires could be made both more productive and more legitimate. Frederick Cooper explores how these alternative possibilities narrowed between 1945 and approximately 1960.