Sommario/riassunto	Gegenstand der Publikation ist das Verhältnis von Hochbegabung und sozialer Ungleichheit in der frühen Kindheit. Dabei wird der Fokus auf die pädagogische Arbeit in Kindertageseinrichtungen gelegt. Zunächst wird der Begriff der Hochbegabung als hohe intellektuelle Begabung erschlossen, anschließend im Kontext von Inklusion die Bedeutung der Kindertageseinrichtungen für die Entwicklung hoher kognitiver Begabungen herausgestellt und schließlich mehrdimensional das Verhältnis von Hochbegabung und sozialer Ungleichheit betrachtet. Aus den Erkenntnissen werden Handlungsempfehlungen abgeleitet.

Sommario/riassunto	"Authoritarian regimes smother internet and the social media. This book boldly argues this is not the case in China, where the party-state is torn between conflicting political and economic objectives. Taking advantage of this "double-bind regulation", private internet firms have managed to secure zones of autonomy . A brilliant demonstration." -- Nonna Mayer, Sciences Po, Paris "In China as a Double-Bind Regulatory State, Aifang Ma provides an ambitious yet convincing framework to explain the puzzling coexistence of an all-powerful and unchecked party-state and the relatively autonomous space for private internet and social media firms to grow and thrive. This book is theoretically innovative, methodologically rigorous, and empirically rich. A must read for anyone curious about internet governance and regulation in China.” --Rongbin Han, University of Georgia “An extraordinarily interesting, highly provocative and deeply empirical piece of political analysis on a topic of staggering importance. Its achievement, above all, is to restore the agency of firms and netizens in its forensic reconstruction and de-mythologising of the saga of the ongoing birth of a digital public sphere in China.” --Colin Hay, Sciences Po, Paris “Through a detailed, provocative and insightful analysis of state-firm interactions, Aifang Ma shows how private internet firms in China carved out a space of relative autonomy. This book is a must-read for students of Chinese internet regulation.” --Guobin Yang, University of Pennsylvania This book explores the power dynamics in the Chinese regulation of internet firms. It conceptualises China as a “double-bind regulatory state”, defined as a two-step autonomy-enabling process. First, the party-state’s pursuit of competing objectives creates its predicament. Second, private internet firms consciously exploit such predicament to enlarge their manoeuvring room. The double-bind regulation approach challenges some current academic accounts that exaggerate the capacity of the Chinese party-state to establish seamless control. Aifang Ma is currently a Boya postdoctoral scholar and a Lecturer at Peking University. She holds a Ph.D in political science at Sciences Po Paris. .
