Sommario/riassunto	Ten o'clock, still no bread. We've been waiting since seven. Terrible hunger. I feel sick to my stomach and totally weak. I'm unable to make two bunks any more, my legs refuse to carry me. It's a miracle I can still move my hand to write. I've taken valerian without sugar and lain down. Bubi is licking sour salt out of sheer hunger. It's eleven o'clock now and he still hasn't come back with the bread. We're shaking all over. He has got a ration stamp for bread and nobody will lend us anything. Two more days like this and we won't be among the living. Irene Hauser, A Journal
