| Sommario/riassunto | This book recounts the experiences of three Chilean women, Edelmira Carrillo Paz, Ester Hernández Cid, and Teresa Veloso Bermedo, who faced repression, torture, and exile during the dictatorship of General Augusto Pinochet. It explores themes of violence, identity, and memory, focusing on their personal and collective struggles to survive and bear witness to the atrocities they endured. The work is an act of remembrance and a call for justice, highlighting the impact of political repression on individuals and their families. It aims to preserve the memory of those who suffered and to contribute to the historical understanding of Chile's past. The intended audience includes those interested in human rights, Latin American history, and gender studies. |
