Sommario/riassunto	This volume explores the concept of 'migrant writing' through interviews and studies that delve into the complexities of literature associated with migration. It features a conversation with author Gabriella Kuruvilla, highlighting her unique approach to themes of migration despite her lack of personal migration experience. The book examines the evolving definitions and critiques of 'migrant literature' and 'second-generation literature,' emphasizing the cultural and linguistic influences that shape these narratives. It is intended for scholars, students, and anyone interested in contemporary literary movements and their socio-cultural impacts.
