

1.	Record Nr.	UNISALENTO991002941699707536
	Autore	Gardin, Jean Claude
	Titolo	Representations in archaeology / edited by Jean-Claude Gardin and Christopher S. Peebles
	Pubbl/distr/stampa	Bloomington ; Indianapolis : Indiana university press, c1992
	Descrizione fisica	IX, 394 p. ; 25 cm
	Altri autori (Persone)	Peebles, Christopher S.
	Disciplina	930.1
	Soggetti	Archeologia - Aspetti filosofici
	Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
	Formato	Materiale a stampa
	Livello bibliografico	Monografia
2.	Record Nr.	UNINA9910954388303321
	Autore	Tziampiris Aristotle
	Titolo	Faith and reason of state : lessons from early modern Europe and Cardinal Richelieu / / Aristotle Tziampiris
	Pubbl/distr/stampa	New York, : Nova Science Publishers, Inc., c2009
	ISBN	9781613245699 1613245696
	Descrizione fisica	1 online resource (142 p.)
	Collana	European political, economic, and security issues series
	Disciplina	320.1092
	Soggetti	Church and state - France - History - 17th century Religion and politics - France - History - 17th century Religion and politics - Europe - History - 17th century France Religion 17th century France Politics and government 17th century France History Louis XIII, 1610-1643 France Foreign relations 1610-1643 Europe Religion 17th century Europe Politics and government 17th century
	Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese

Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Description based upon print version of record.
Nota di bibliografia	Includes bibliographical references (p. [97]-111) and index.
Sommario/riassunto	Faith-based and secular approaches to politics and foreign policy have often been involved in a kind of uneasy and adversarial 'contest.' However, the world produced by the 1648 Treaty of Westphalia, in conjunctions with the (often radical) Enlightenment, the impact of the French Revolution and the advent during the 20th century of popular and secular mass ideologies, strongly suggested that a modern 'winner' had emerged; especially in the West, most faith-related tensions on various issues appeared to have been primarily resolved on the basis of non-religious considerations and choices. There can be little doubt, though, that the 21st century is witnessing a global resurgence of religion that has manifested itself both peacefully and violently. This 'return of faith' has implications for International Relations theory and also poses significant challenges for statesmanship and the pursuit of the national interest. At a minimum, religious beliefs have to be treated with the utmost seriousness. Furthermore, significant questions are inevitably raised about the scope, issues and manner in which personal faith ought to influence domestic and foreign policy. The last time that similar questions were posed with a comparable intensity in the West was during early modern European history. The era's often savage and religiously-inspired conflicts produced profound intellectual efforts aiming to guide statesmanship through these challenges. The result was the development of raison d'état thinking and philosophy. By focusing on the relevant works of Niccolò Machiavelli, Francesco Guicciardini, Giovanni Botero and Justus Lipsius, this book presents the concept's roots, evolution and arguments. The focus in this book is then turned to the career of Cardinal Richelieu, (perhaps the era's most successful statesman) and the key role that reason of state thinking played in his actions is analysed. This book tries to ascertain to what extent, and in what ways, issues of faith and religion formed part of Richelieu's attempts to define and pursue the national interest of seventeenth century France.