| Sommario/riassunto      | A wide range of Arthurian material is discussed here, reflecting its diversity, and enduring vitality. Geoffrey of Monmouth's best-selling &lt;I&gt;Historia regum Britannie&lt;/I&gt; is discussed in the context of Geoffrey's reception in Wales and the relationship between Latin and Welsh literary culture. Two essays deal with the Middle English &lt;I&gt;Ywain and Gawain&lt;/I&gt; : the first offers a comparative study of the Middle English poem alongside Chrétien's &lt;I&gt;Yvain&lt;/I&gt; and the Welsh &lt;I&gt;Owein&lt;/I&gt; , while the second considers &lt;I&gt;Ywain and Gawain&lt;/I&gt; with the Alliterative &lt;I&gt;Morte Arthure&lt;/I&gt; in their northern English cultural and political context, the world of the Percys and the Nevilles. It is followed by a discussion of Edward III's recuperation of his abandoned Order of the Round Table, which offers an intriguing explanation for this reversal in the context of Edward's victory over the |

French at Poitiers. The final essay is a comparison of fifteenth- and twentieth-century portrayals of Camelot in Malory and T.H. White, as both idea and locale, and a centre of hearsay and gossip. The volume is completed with a unique and little-known medieval Greek Arthurian poem, presented in facing-page edition and modern English translation.<BR><BR> Elizabeth Archibald is Professor of English Studies at Durham University, and Principal of St Cuthbert's Society; David F. Johnson is Professor of English at Florida State University, Tallahassee.<BR><BR> Contributors: Christopher Berard, Louis J. Boyle, Thomas H. Crofts, Ralph Hanna, Georgia Lynn Henley, Erich Poppe
