Sommario/riassunto

This scholarly book examines the influence of Arabic philosophical sources on Albert the Great, a significant medieval philosopher. It explores the interplay between inheritance and emergence in medieval science, focusing on how Albert utilized Arabic texts alongside Latin and Hebrew traditions. The book delves into Albert's engagement with the works of notable Arabic philosophers like Avicenna and Averroes, assessing their impact on his thoughts concerning ethics, natural philosophy, and metaphysics. Aimed at scholars and students of medieval philosophy, it highlights Albert's methods of integrating diverse intellectual traditions to shape his own philosophical ideas.
