Sommario/riassunto	This book, part of a series directed by Eugenio Picozza and Raffaele Lener, explores the legal framework surrounding state aid and banking crises within the European context. It delves into the evolution of legal regulations and the integration of European banking systems, addressing how public intervention can affect market dynamics. The book examines the roles of the BRRD and SRM regulations, public interest considerations, and the systemic nature of banking crises. It is intended for legal scholars, policymakers, and professionals dealing with economic law, offering insights into the complexities of state aid, financial stability, and crisis management in banking.
