Sommario/riassunto	The book contains texts of well-known historians, museologists and archivists of ód, who aimed at presenting the impact of the Polish-Soviet War (1919–1921) on the functioning of ód and its inhabitants as well as the participation of ód residents in this armed conflict. The authors present the role of the city as an administrative center and a center of socio-political, cultural and military life. They picture the activities of the ód community as well as the local political, intellectual and economic elites, confronted with the war with Bolshevik Russia. The authors draw expressive portraits of the ód politicians and social activists. At the same time, they are looking for traces of this dramatic period in the modern image of the city, its museums, archives and at the great necropolises of ód. They ask questions about the place of 1920 in the collective memory of generations of ód residents.
