Sommario/riassunto	This publication by the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) presents checklists of best practices for formulating national health research policies and agendas. It aims to guide policymakers and stakeholders in creating effective frameworks for health research, emphasizing governance, quality, resources, formal aspects, and knowledge management. The book outlines criteria and domains necessary for developing comprehensive health research strategies aligned with the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). It targets health researchers, policymakers, and organizations involved in public health and governance. The document also discusses the harmonization of research policies with broader public health functions in the Americas, providing a foundational reference for future evaluations and policy renewals.
