Sommario/riassunto

This encyclopedia, directed by Jean-Marc Labat and coordinated by Didier Demazière and Richard Wittorski, explores the comprehensive landscape of sciences education and training. It delves into the organization of professions and the social dimensions of education, addressing themes such as professionalization theories, the creation of professions, and the evolving standards at work. The book examines the intersection of social policies, labor, and educational practices, offering insights into the dynamics of professional boundaries and autonomy. Intended for academics, educators, and policymakers, it aims to provide a critical analysis of the current state and future directions of professional education within societal contexts.
