Sommario/riassunto	Marie-Victorin (1885-1944) est le scientifique le plus connu du Québec. Sa renommée repose avant tout sur le Jardin botanique de Montréal, qu'il fonda en 1931, et sur sa célèbre Flore laurentienne (1935). À partir de 1938, il fit sept voyages à Cuba, des séjours qui lui permirent de prendre contact avec un certain frère Léon, Français émigré à Cuba et auteur de la Flora de Cuba, avec qui il publia les Itinéraires botaniques dans l'île de Cuba en trois volumes. Ces ouvrages dominèrent pendant des décennies l'histoire botanique de la Perle des Antilles. Marie-Victorin et le frère Léon ont entretenu de 1907 à 1944 une correspondance soutenue qui nous permet de comprendre leur cheminement respectif. Cette correspondance, souvent émaillée d'humour, nous fait découvrir de nombreuses facettes de cette période cubaine d'un Marie-Victorin maladif, détestant l'hiver canadien, se réfugiant dans un hôtel de La Havane et désirant vivre autrement deux ou trois mois par année, loin de son Jardin botanique et des exigences de sa communauté. On y sent toute la ferveur des deux botanistes et leur connivence de scientifiques ayant pris les ordres.

Sommario/riassunto	This book offers a radical re-examination of the history of the Cornish language, challenging the long-held belief that it became extinct with the death of Dolly Pentreath in 1777. Instead, it reveals compelling evidence that Cornish continued to be used throughout the 19th century, by the working class, by academics, and by those seeking to preserve the language. Exploring the research of antiquarians such as

Dr. Fred W.P. Jago, Reverend Lach-Szyrma, and Henry Jenner, this book uncovers overlooked accounts of Cornish speakers and reassesses their linguistic knowledge. By tracing the language's survival beyond its supposed extinction, the author argues that during the nineteenth century Cornish should be classified as critically endangered rather than extinct. Essential for scholars of minority languages, heritage researchers, and the Cornish language community, this book reshapes our understanding of Cornish history—proving that its story is one of resilience, not disappearance. Kensa Broadhurst is Cornish Language Lead at the University of Exeter, UK where she obtained her PhD, funded by the Cornwall Heritage Trust. Kensa is a Bard of the Cornish Gorsedh and teaches and examines Cornish for the University of Exeter and more widely within the language community.
