Sommario/riassunto	This book by Bob Hoogenboom examines the complex dynamics of authority and management within the context of the National Police in Limburg, the Netherlands. It critiques the increasing politicization of police work and the erosion of local authority in favor of centralized control by the Ministry of Justice. The author emphasizes the need for a balanced approach that maintains the principles of authority and counterbalance as essential elements of effective policing. Targeting policymakers, academics, and law enforcement professionals, the book argues for a reevaluation of police governance to address contemporary safety challenges and the demands of citizens. It also proposes a new vision for the police force that emphasizes local engagement and effective oversight.
