Sommario/riassunto

In June 1996, the Centre for Cultural Studies hosted a conference entitled Aesthetics. Politics. Ethics: Julia Kristeva 1966-96. It was held at the Leeds City Art Gallery whose monumental neighbour is the equally nineteenth century structure of Cuthbert Broderick's Town Hall: the proximities of, and the tensions between the state and culture are often the very topics of Cultural Studies. This conference could have been hosted by one of several subgroups within the University of Leeds and the Department of Fine Art in particular. As an art historian, I could have planned this event to consider the c
