Sommario/riassunto

This book addresses the most important question in pre-modern German political history: why did a multiplicity of states and territories emerge by the end of the Middle Ages instead of an incipient 'nation state' under the crown? The answer is found not in the supposed failures of German kingship, but instead in the creative aristocratic successes of the secular dynasties and princes of the Church. We see how their collective efforts in the centuries after 1050 added up to a more markedly territorial structure of regional power, already emerging by the thirteenth century as a result of their endeavours in the economy, internal and external colonization, and the establishment of new castles, towns, monasteries and communications; in local, ecclesiastical and imperial law, and the jurisdictional reform which they imposed in their regions; and in the uses of dynastic politics, including feuds as well as alliances, inheritance and partition.

Sommario/riassunto	It is rare that a series can claim a unique status but Advances in Photochemistry is alone in providing one of the only forums for critical and authoritative evaluation of advances in the discipline of photochemistry. Founded in 1963, the series has provided an open forum for pioneers in the field to expand and explore new and radical ideas at the forefront of photochemical research, with each new volume providing a stimulating review of the latest breakthrough and theories in this rapidly developing field.
