Titolo	A description of the state and condition of all mankinde upon the face of the whole earth [[electronic resource]] : And a discovery unto all; shewing what man was in his creation before transgression, and what he is in transgression; how he is become a degenerate piant, bringing forth cursed fruit, to the grieving of the good husbandman, who is thereby provoked continually against the works of his own hands to destroy that which he hath made, because it is defiled through mans transgression. : Also, the way of restoration, of salvation, redemption and of life eternal is here declared unto all the sons and daughters of Adam in the whole world, that all may come to the knowledge of the creator, and to haze [sic] fellowship with him again, from whom all the children of men are separated in the state of enmity, and are ignorant of him, and drove from his presence. : This is to abroad into all the Earth, through the whole world, as a call and visitation unto all mankinde, that they may hear and consider their condition, and may return from whence they are fallen, and may be restored again to serve, and worship, and glorifie the living God, who made Heaven and Earth, and all things therein. // By one who has measured and viewed in true judgement the condition of all mankind; who is a lover of souls, and friend to the creation of God, known by the name of Edward Burrough
