Titolo	The constant man's character [[electronic resource]] : intended to be sent first as a letter from a gentleman in the country, to a gentlemen his esteemed friend and countryman, a Member of the House of Commons. Since enlarged into a discourse by way of advice to keep him from revolting either directly or collaterally by the side-wind of being Presbyterially affected, through the mistaken and unhappy conceit, that those who have taken the Covenant, cannot without breach of the same, assent and submit unto the late proceedings of the Parliament, when as the parts thereof seem to be inconsistent within themselves, as the authors observations here discoursed do manifest. Together with some animadversions incident hereunto on the book given out to be the late kings, called Eikon Basilike, and the two declarations, intituled, The declarations of the Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament: printed at Oxford, 1643. The one touching a treaty for peace. Other concerning their endeavors for peace
