

1. Record Nr.	UNISA996391163903316
Autore	Horn John <1614-1676.>
Titolo	A comfortable corroborative cordial: or, A sovereign antidote against, and preservative from, the horrors & harms of death [[electronic resource]] : affording a direction how to live and die, so as to be fortified and fenced against the greatest fears and sharpest sense of that king of terrours. Represented in some observations made upon Rev. 14. 13. Upon occasion of the late death and burial of Mrs. Rebecca Jackler late wife of Mr. John Jackler of Kings-Lynn in Norfolk, woollen-draper; who deceased Octob. 5. and was buried Octob. 7. 1671. By John Horne, sometime preacher of Gods word in Lynn-Alhallows in the same town. Useful to be considered by all men living in this state of mortality: because there is no man living but must certainly die
Pubbl/distr/stampa	London, : printed by Tho. Radcliffe, and N. Thompson, for B. Southwood at the Star next to Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-lane, 1672
Descrizione fisica	[8], 117, [3] p
Soggetti	Death - Religious aspects - Christianity
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	"Epitaphium in amicam suam Dam. Rebeccam Jackler" is on final leaf in Latin (H8r) and in English (H8v) as, "An epitaph upon his deceased friend Mrs. R. J." Copy stained and tightly bound with slight loss of text. Reproduction of the original in the British Library.
Sommario/riassunto	eebo-0018