Titolo	A fresh discovery of the high-Presbyterian spirit. Or The quenching of the second beacon fired [[electronic resource]] : Declaring I. The un-Christian dealings of the authors of a pamphlet, entitled, A second beacon fired, &c. In presenting unto the Lord Protector and Parliament, a falsified passage out of one of Mr John Goodwins books, as containing, either blasphemie, or error, or both. II. The evil of their petition for subjecting the libertie of the press to the arbitrariness and will of a few men. III. The Christian equity, that satisfaction be given to the person so notoriously and publickly wronged. Together with the responsatory epistle of the said beacon firers, to the said Mr Goodwin, fraught with further revilings, falsifications, scurrilous language, &c. instead of a Christian acknowledgment of their error. Upon which epistle some animadversions are made, // by John Goodwin, a servant of God in the Gospel of his dear Son. Also two letters written some years since, the one by the said John Goodwin to Mr. J. Caryl; the other, by Mr Caryl in answer hereunto; both relating to the passage above hinted
