

1. Record Nr.	UNISA996393884003316
Titolo	The batchelors ballad. Or a remedy against love [[electronic resource]] : Thou little peevish God! whom heretofore, the blinder world, so highly did adore; bor [sic] whom the loving fools a quiver found, fows [sic], arrows, wings; nay more, pow'r to wou[ld] know, I defie thee, boy; not all thy art, can reach my eye, much-less enslave my heart: if thon [sic] hast any, come and shew thy skill, fain would I love one hour against my will; alas poor God! men will no longer now, to thee, thy mother, or thy minions bow; your pow'r & fame which has so long been gre[at] upon examination proves a cheat. To a pleasant new tune: or, The Duke of Monmouth's jig. With allowance, by R. L'Estrang[e]
Pubbl/distr/stampa	[London], : Printed for Philip Brooksby, at the Golden-Ball in West- smith's-field, [1677]
Descrizione fisica	1 sheet ([1] p.) : ill. (woodcuts)
Soggetti	Love poetry, English - England Ballads, English - 17th century BroadsidesEnglandLondon
Lingua di pubblicazione	Inglese
Formato	Materiale a stampa
Livello bibliografico	Monografia
Note generali	Place of publication and date from Wing CD-ROM, 1996. Wing states two settings. In this setting there are four columns, with three woodcuts. Above the first column is a woodcut of Cupid, above the third and fourth columns are woodcuts of a man and a woman respectively. Verse - "No more silly Cupid,". O copy, reel 2542, is cropped with some loss of text. Reproduction of original in the Boldeian Library, Oxford, England.
Sommario/riassunto	eebo-0014