Autore	Trepidantium Malleus
Titolo	A confirmation of a late epistle to Mr. George Keith, and the reformed Quakers [[electronic resource] ] : Against plunging in baptism, and for effusion, commonly called sprinkling. Wherein is proved, I. That plunging and whoring came in together; ... II. That notwithstanding the temptation many anabaptists, through a happy constitution, or the prevalency of the grace of God, are sober, chast, and serious. III. That it becomes all our honest maids, wives, and widows, to preserve their old baptism and chastity. With an epistle to a lay pedler in philology, oratory, and theology, Mr. Minge, about his deceitful title, and epistle in a book against me: whose name helps me to a thought against plunging. That it tends to, and actually doth, open the fountains of nature in men and women; and therefore is not, cannot be an ordinance of Christ, but a human, or rather diabolical invention. Also a censure of Mr. Judas Tull, his lampoon. By Trepidantium Malleus
