| Titolo | A cordial for drooping sinners. Or, Comfort to such as tremble at God's word, for fear the gospel should be taken from us [[electronic resource]] : Arising from consideration, that in what nation soever the gospel was planted, it was never totally removed from thence; but after an eclipse brought upon them for a time, it frequently revived again. As appears in the following discourse, by an enumeration of particulars all the world over. Together with some brief signs how to know in what nation the gospel is likely to be continued; or from what nation it is likely to be removed. By John Leighton, minister of the gospel in Nottinghamshire. Licensed, Decemb. the 4th. 1690 |
