| Sommario/riassunto | More than 40 years have passed since the author first put forward the | argument that traditionally observant Jews have no reason to take issue with the results obtained by the historical critics in their investigation into the Bible & the other classical sources of Judaism. The author has argued that the traditional doctrine which claims that 'the Torah is from Heaven' can and should be maintained - provided that the word 'from' is understood in a non-fundamentalist way to denote that there is a human as well as a divine element in the Torah. As a result of these views, which were first published in the still-controversial text 'We Have Reason to Believe', the Anglo-Jewish Orthodox hierarchy banned the author from serving as an Orthodox rabbi. This text examines afresh all the issues involved.
